

Next Steps

We hope you've had a chance to explore the activities in this course with your students and peers. Feel free to revisit the activities and practice them later.

If you are taking this course for credit and feel confident as a Full-Circle Learning practitioner, ask your team leader or instructor for a certificate from your institution. You may also download the Full-Circle Learning School course completion certificate offered with this last session.

To enhance your understanding of the theories in this course, read the course text Why We Learn. You will find access to this book, free of charge, on the website www.fullcirclelearning.org/educator/education-course.

Songs (with vocalists and instrumental versions) are also accessible on the Full-Circle Learning website to help you align your character, service and academic themes. You will find them at www.fullcirclelearning.org/educator/audio. They are categorized by CD. Each song also appears in a songbook in the curriculum section of the website, at www.fullcirclelearning.org/educator/curricula

The curriculum section includes many other resources as well. Some teachers also like to refer to Full-Circle Learning units time-tested in other classrooms, and so they browse curriculum modules as springboard from which to customize their own learning units. As you look at these books, you'll note that all the habits-of-heart in a module build on one another.

The section at www.fullcirclelearning.org/educator/curricula includes titles such as:

Habits of Heroes

Habits of Humanitarians

Climate Change Agents

Habits of Oneness

Habits of Helpers (for early learners)

Habits of African Leaders

Change Agents in Africa

Habits of African Sages

Full-Circle Learning Vol. 1 (for nonformal enrichment programs)

The Sky Belongs to Everyone: Stories for Resilience (a short version appears on the website and a full version is available on Amazon, published by North Atlantic Press)

Fostering Future Leaders (a printable version of an onsite training course)

Twenty Marks of a Full-Circle Learning School provides a checklist for you to track how many best practices you have incorporated into your coherent approach to teaching. We wish you many days of delight and community transformation as a result of those efforts! Congratulations on your new role as a Full-Circle Learning practitioner!
